This is a reference to the backing vocals on the otherwise elegant and gorgeous Beatles song "Girl"; they lied to George Martin that what they were singing was dit-dit-dit-dit-dit-dit. Another day another highway An endless ribbon of blue My life is a long road Winding slowly back to you.

The lines along the bottom of the painting were taken from the decoration around the house. And I said, 'No, I'll tell you what we can do is, I can make it questionable as to what it is I'm singing. I heard it changes you and you'll never be the same .

Time to let go, let go of it all, let myself feel all of the love that is around me. I fail in this, and sometimes I don't really mind failing, though it's fascinating to me not just that McCartney often gravitates to certain kinds of Beatles stories anyway, which is maybe understandable given that it is probably what is usually expected of him, but that in doing so he often offers ripostes to slurs that haven't been mentioned in the present conversation. We'd make pit stops at home for lunch and supper, but otherwise "the posse" would ride as one from shortly after dawn until dusk.
