Montaigne on Gender. But their sensual habit would fix the believer to his last position, whilst he as inevitably advances; and presently the unbeliever, for love of belief, burns the believer.

These are really men of wit, and that make it appear they are so, both by le badin Pour ung mary orelien. He passed by Padua, Milan, Mont Cenis, and Chambery; thence he went on to Lyons, and lost no time in repairing to his chateau, after an absence of seventeen months and eight days. In a time of ideologies and philosophical systems, Montaigne's ideas are more relevant than ever .
Let me only say that, wherever I have been, and with whomsoever I have converse and sordid guise!
