This is his 'best' most recent work. Scholes, Robert E. Why It's On the List Beautifully written, vividly realised, and packed with ideas that make us constantly reassess our views on the different political systems in the novel, this is a prime example of science fiction as the literature of ideas. It's well worth the read. Dave Dryfoos. It portrays a world deeply confused, and forever changed, by this sudden inexplicable series of events. Tamora Maddox is Director of the landfill known as Garbageland. The Beginning and the End. The novel provides a platform for Heinlein to discuss themes familiar from a lot of his work, including non-traditional social and sexual organisation here, for instance, the idea of the line marriage, with new people joining the marriage at regular intervals so it is virtually unending and libertarian politics.
