I now prefer the term dialogic talk since what seems to be most essential to this type of talk is identification with dialogue itself as opposed to the identifications with particular images which characterize Disputational and Cumulative Talk. Indeed it is not possible for words to have simple, single and located meanings as they always carry with them echoes of all the other voices that have used the same words before in different ways. The Internet, like oracy, is a medium that affords participation and dialogue.
