These estimates include total process solid waste and total hazardous or potentially hazardous solid wastes. It was found that the biodegradability of tannin-containing wastewater varies heavily with the content of tannins in wastewater. It is necessary that all pollution control systems be addressed from the perspective of the tannery. An important component in tanning is the removal of hair from the hide unhairing process which generates considerable amounts of toxic effluent characterized by a high concentration of sulphur, rich mineral compounds, a high alkalinity and a high organic load. This requirement will encourage new facilities to treat wastewaters subject to NSPS for direct discharge. It also may be done after tanning in the case of sheepskins, or by caustic burn-off. Energy for convective drying was found to be
