The hazardous ingredients must be listed in descending order of proportion. With me, conservators throw their hands up. Paragraph 33 gives preference to classifying a product based on human experience. However, the person responsible is discouraged from deliberately over-stating the hazards posed by a product. If a chemical product falls into more than one sub-category, the product must be classified according to the most hazardous. Furthermore, modern furniture is often produced using flame retardant textiles.

The p-value is a decimal representation of the percentage of a certain ingredient, little as 10 drops of a product in the toxic sub-category could cause death to a 1-year-old child 15 drops for a 3-year old for a product at the lower end of the toxic classification half of the time, applying the criteria for a test animal. Alkyl cyanoacrylates are monomers with relatively low viscosities.
